If you are helping a loved one cope with dementia, you are not alone.

Caring for a loved one with dementia can be physically and emotionally taxing. As symptoms progress, individuals will require increasing care resulting in around-the-clock safety monitoring and support with lifestyle and household activities. In addition, the personality changes, memory loss and irritability associated with the condition can take a psychological toll on family members. In fact, 61% of family caregivers have reported significant emotional stress and 43% have reported physical stress from caring for someone with Alzheimer's.

If you are helping a loved one cope with dementia, you are not alone. If you are considering care options for your loved one, AccuAid Care is here to help. We understand the unique needs of those with dementia. Our caregivers have experience in caring for those living with Alzheimer's and dementia and receive ongoing training in dementia specific caregiving skills, as well as lifestyle improvements to help promote a healthy brain stimulation.

The most important step you can take to ensure optimal quality of life for your loved one is to educate yourself.

If you are interested in learning more, call us today. A Client Care Manager will conduct a free care assessment and help you create a personalized care plan. While there is currently no cure for dementia, we are committed to ensuring the highest quality of life for your loved one.

How AccuAid Care Can Help?

Mind Stimulating Activities. Our caregivers understand the nuances of working with older adults with Alzheimer's and other forms of dementia. Our caregivers can incorporate brain stimulating activities in the daily routine as they can slow down dementia in the early stages. Cognitive stimulation activities may include puzzles, word games, reading, creative activities and social engagement.

Personalized Care Plans. Our Client Care Managers conduct in-depth assessments, evaluating each client's care needs including medical conditions, mobility issues and cognitive status. They also gather personal information like meal preferences and favorite activities to help promote optimal

Ongoing Quality Assurance. We provide regular updates at your discretion to designated family members and friends. Our caregivers track your loved one's condition and daily needs, and we conduct regular quality assurance and re-assessment visits so that the level of care being offered is always appropriate for the client's current needs.

Comfort of Home. Individuals with dementia respond best to a stable, familiar environment and an established routine. Our caregivers can help your loved ones stay home, even after care needs evolve, to provide maximum comfort and help ease symptoms of the disease.

Consistency. Unlike some other providers, we match each client with a specific caregiver and focus on the long-term relationship. Consistency is especially important for individuals with dementia who can have negative reactions to unfamiliar faces.

Peace of Mind for the Family. With a Home Care Assistance caregiver, you can rest assured that your loved one is always receiving high-quality, compassionate care. Our caregivers receive in-depth training and support, and our Client Care Managers are available 24/7 to address client needs and emergencies.
